Subject: Product review self reflection

I am writing this memo to reflect on the struggles that I faced while structuring my recent product review essay and what I did to overcome those difficulties. When I started writing my product review essay, I had a lot of thoughts and ideas on the product that I wanted to include in the essay. However, I found it difficult to organize those ideas in a coherent and logical way. As a result, my essay seemed disjointed, and it lacked a clear structure.

To address this issue, I took a step back and reviewed my essay outline. I realized that I needed to improve the organization of my essay and create a better flow of ideas. I then restructured my outline to include subheadings that would allow me to organize my thoughts and ideas more effectively. This allowed me to group similar ideas together and create a more logical progression of ideas throughout my essay. I also made sure to include a clear introduction and conclusion that provided a concise summary of my main points. This helped to tie the essay together and ensure that the reader understood the main message I was trying to convey.

In addition, I made sure to revise my essay multiple times to ensure that my thoughts and ideas flowed logically and were presented in a way that was easy for the reader to follow. This process of revising and reorganizing my essay helped me to overcome the struggles I had with structuring my essay and ultimately produced a better product review essay. Overall, I learned the importance of taking a step back and reviewing my essay outline to improve the organization and flow of my ideas. By doing so, I was able to produce a well-structured and coherent product review essay.
